

Short-Term Psychoanalytic Supportive Psychotherapy (SPSP-25)

What is SPSP-25?

SPSP-25 is an abbreviation of short-term psychoanalytic supportive psychotherapy, where 25 stands for 25 treatment sessions. This treatment may help you if you have persistent or recurrent mood disorders, such as depression. Different aspects are at play in mood disorders:

- The predisposition you have from birth.
- The events you experience in your life.
- The vulnerable parts of your character.

In SPSP-25 you and your therapist explore how your mood disorders are connected to your life experiences, your current relationships, the impact of past experiences, and how you perceive yourself.

An important outcome of the treatment is that your mood disorders subside, and you feel better. You will also work with your therapist to explore the difficult experiences from your past that have an impact on this. It will help you to better understand yourself. You will recognise unhelpful thoughts and emotions that you have not yet processed. You will also often start seeing yourself and others from a different perspective. This will boost your self-confidence and you can often have more positive relationships with others. This may help to prevent you from experiencing mood disorders or feeling down again during difficult moments or in times of stress.

It is scientifically proven that SPSP helps if you are depressed, whether or not you suffer from personality disorders.

Who is SPSP-25 intended for?

SPSP-25 is an effective treatment if you have persistent or recurrent mood disorders.

SPSP-25 is not an effective treatment if you:

- Suffer from major psychosocial problems. In other words, if your main issues are not only psychological, but also social. For example, if you do not have a permanent or temporary address, or you have major financial difficulties.
- If you suffer from addiction.
- If you suffer from severe depression.
- If you frequently contemplate suicide.
- If you have a bipolar disorder.
- If you are suffering from psychosis.
- If you have so many advantages from your problems, such as support, attention, benefits, that you prefer to remain ill as opposed to wanting to recover. We call this secondary gain.

What happens in SPSP-25?

The main goal at the start of the treatment is to build a good relationship with your therapist. This is why you will meet twice a week during the first month of treatment. Together, you will explore your mood disorders and how you experience them. After a while you will feel at ease and you will little by little begin to feel the change.

Together, you will also explore whether your symptoms are related to what is going on in your life. Next, you and your therapist will explore the impact of the main relationships you have with others and whether there are any patterns in how your mood disorders emerge or persist. You do this based on examples of recent true-life situations that have triggered a lot of feelings in you. Together with your therapist, you will explore the possibilities of changing your feelings, your thoughts and your behaviour. This phase of the treatment often leads to a shift in the topics you talk about. First, you will still talk about the situation in your life and the patterns in relationships with others. As time passes, the focus will shift to the relationship you have with yourself and how you take care of yourself.

At the end, you will talk about the treatment and about how you will move on once the treatment has stopped. It is about how to recognise in time if things take a turn for the worse again, and what you can do in that case. If the treatment stops, so will your contact with your therapist. This may occasionally trigger strong emotions. This is something which you will also discuss together.

How long will the treatment be?

An SPSP-25 treatment consists of 25 individual, one-to-one sessions. Each session takes 45 minutes. The treatment is about seven to eight months.

- For the first four weeks, you will meet up with your therapist twice a week, for a total of eight sessions.
- For the next nine weeks, you will meet up with your therapist once a week, for a total of nine sessions.
- For the last eight sessions, you will meet up with your therapist once every two weeks.
